

Introductory note- exculpatory evidence

"What appears in the following pages is based not only upon my own research in Memphis....it is also based upon the actual records - police and court records... transcripts and tapes of interrogations on the scene...I have also had access to the private diaries kept by many of the principals in the case as well as the ~~benefit~~ of extensive investigative reports."

Diaries of the prosecution end, I presume?

If the defense felt this could include exculpatory evidence, would you, in the interest of truth and justice, make this available to the defense?

Since the days of Aaron Burr, by law, exculpatory evidence in the possession of the prosecution is the right of the accused and the canons of the bar require it, too.
